Macquarie Graduate School of Management (MGSM) has an international reputation for excellence in management education and is consistently ranked in the top tier of business school worldwide. According to the 2015 “Which MBA?” survey by The Economist, MGSM has been ranked number 28 in the world.

This ranking places MGSM not only in the top 30 Business Schools around the globe, but also in the top three in the Asian time zone. Professor Alex Frino, Dean of MGSM, said: “As the rankings are extremely important to international applicants, we have seen a steady increase in international student enrollments as we have incrementally improved our programme and subsequently climbed the important rating scales.”

Earlier this year, another prestigious world’s rankings indicator, the Financial Times, placed MGSM among the top 100 and as Australia’s leading MBA school, giving significant affirmation to the quality of its offering. In partnership with The Hong Kong Management Association (HKMA), MGSM has developed a strong reputation as a leading Business School, not just in Sydney and Hong Kong, but globally. MGSM is recognized by students and recruiters as a leading Business School that helps to develop world-class talent.

Students can commence their study programme in January and June each year.

The Graduate Certificate of Management which consists of 4 course units is a starting point for students gradually entering into a study route. Following the unique progression path, students can attain the Graduate Diploma of Management with a total of 8 course units. Earning the MBA qualification requires a further 8 units for a total of 16 units. More students are opting to do the full MBA as it opens more doors for them professionally.
